In Commandery as in all things...

No Pain No Gain For Officers Only

Human nature being what it is, I hoped "For Officers Only" might be of sufficient interest to attract your attention. If I now have it - keep with me, indulge me.

Let me make it crystal clear - No one ever said it would be easy to serve as an officer in your Commandery. Believe me, it isn't. You will find as you progress in 'line' that involvement in any branch of Masonry keeps you constantly on your toes. It requires a large investment of time and energy - sometimes even your own money! I am not talking about the time you spend conducting your next Conclave; I am talking about the time you spend in planning for those Conclaves. Sooner or later you are going to be the Eminent Commander of your Commandery. I suggest that you start thinking like one now.

Try your best to make those Conclaves or programs interesting to those on the sidelines. Timely films and tapes are regularly available from the Grand Encampment, the Knights Templar Eye Foundation, and your own or a neighboring Grand Lodge. A guest physician might give you some health tips. (We aren't getting any younger.) An entertainer or grand officer in town for a visit could be invited for a program. An environmentalist could bring you up-to-date on water and air quality. There is an endless list of provocative subject material - including Sir Knights from your own membership. Perhaps, you could designate in advance a Sir Knight at your next Conclave to give a two or three-minute speech about himself - it has worked in Toastmasters for years. This could be carried on throughout the year, a different Templar each month.

Anyway, it is a job for someone tough enough to stand up under fire, strong enough to make his presence felt, bold enough to rise above any contention which could develop, and controlled enough to always keep his head.

In short, it's a tough racket. Why not prove you can take the pain and make a gain?

"The Magazine for York Rite Masons - and Others, too"

JANUARY: In Ancient Rome, the first month of the new year was dedicated to the God Janus. He was represented with two faces, one looking backward to the old year and one looking forward to the new. On the first of the Roman year all lawsuits were suspended, differences were reconciled, and friendships renewed. The people wished each other health and prosperity; presents were given, and there was feasting and festivity throughout the empire. Let us emulate the ancients by looking to the past and the future of our order, and for our Lord's sake, by loving one another.

Archduke Maximilian Emperor of Mexico

by Sir Knight C. Clark Julius, KTCH

The marriage of Archduke Maximilian of Austria, who was twenty-five, to the Princess Charlotte of Belgium, who was seventeen, took place in 1857. The royal pedigrees of the bride and groom were impressive. The archduke was the brother of Francis Joseph, the Emperor of Austria. Princess Charlotte, the daughter of King Leopold of Belgium, was the first cousin of Queen Victoria of England. Despite their close kinship to the ruling monarchs of Europe, the young couple lacked a kingdom over which they could reign. They were unemployed royalty.

It seemed a shame that Maximilian and Charlotte did not have a royal assignment. The young couple were up-to-date in their notions of the proper role of royalty in the mid-nineteenth century. They rejected the outmoded belief in the divine right of monarchs to rule with unquestioned power. Instead, they believed a king should reign with the consent of his subjects, to whose welfare he should be devoted.

Maximilian welcomed new ideas. As an officer in the Austrian navy he had studied shipbuilding, navigation, and oceanography. He had advocated many improvements in the Austrian navy. Because he was the brother of the Emperor, Francis Joseph, Maximilian was able to have his ideas accepted and acted on. In recognition of his services to the navy, Maximilian was promoted by his brother to the rank of vice-admiral. To many Austrians he was fondly known as the "sailor prince."

In addition to his professional interest in navy science, Maximilian had broad cultural interests. He was a naturalist who was especially knowledgeable about birds and butterflies. He read widely in history. He was fond of music and was a competent performer on the organ. He wrote simple poetry that was precise in meter and rhyme.

It was because of his own wide-ranging intellectual interests that Maximilian had been attracted to Charlotte, who impressed everyone she met with the keenness of her mind. Her favorite subject was philosophy, but mathematics was a close second. She studied calculus on her own. Her favorite composer was the profound Bach. If intelligence was an ingredient of queenly talent, Charlotte was outstandingly deserving of a throne.

A year after their marriage Maximilian and Charlotte were awarded the sovereignty for which they seemed to be so well qualified. Maximilian's brother, Austrian Emperor Francis Joseph, appointed Maximilian governor of the Austrian-held provinces of Venetia and Lombardy, which contained the cities of Milan and Venice in northern Italy.

Charlotte prepared herself for her new responsibilities by learning to speak Italian and by studying Italian history.

Maximilian's and Charlotte's new assignment was not an easy one. Italian nationalists wanted to rid their country of foreign control by the Austrians. Very soon their Italian subjects began to display resentment toward Maximilian and Charlotte. There were hisses from the populace when Maximilian and Charlotte rode in their carriage through the streets. An announcement that the governor and his wife would attend the theater on a certain night resulted in an empty theater on that night.

While Charlotte busied herself in charitable activities, Maximilian strove to win the hearts of his rebellious subjects. Instead of trying to repress the desire of his people for democracy and independence he espoused those ideals himself. He attempted to set up a federation of all the various Italian states in which they would form a common market. He proposed the building of a railroad from one end of Italy to the other, linking the entire nation by rail. He favored disbanding all provincial armies to form one national Italian army.

Maximilian's brother, the Austrian Emperor Francis Joseph, was furious when he learned that Maximilian was actually encouraging the very tendencies which Francis Joseph wanted to stamp out in Italy. In several meetings the brothers quarreled bitterly. It was rumored that Maximilian had actually struck the Emperor during one of their altercations. Maximilian's and Francis Joseph's mother, the Archduchess Sophia, was very upset by the fights between her sons.

When Maximilian failed to arrest and imprison leaders of a demonstration by Italian students opposed to Austrian rule, Francis Joseph removed Maximilian from his post of governor of Venetia-Lombardy. Soon after Maximilian was removed from office, Louis-Napoleon, the adventurous Emperor of France, came to the aid of the Italian nationalists. With French assistance, the Italians drove the Austrians out of Italy.

Since Maximilian and Charlotte were unemployed, they moved to a beautiful castle near Trieste on the Adriatic Sea. Here they lived a life of luxurious ease, indulging in their various intellectual diversions. Maximilian was happy to be free of the responsibilities of governing, but Charlotte was miserable. Brought up by her father to rule, she felt that her life was pointless and empty without a kingdom to command. One of her brothers said, "Charlotte was always determined to have a throne at any cost."

Her unhappiness was deepened by the hopelessness of her situation. She could see no prospect that her husband would ever again be put in charge of a principality. During his brief term as governor in northern Italy he had so antagonized his brother, Francis Joseph, that the Emperor would never again trust Maximilian in a sovereignty. Charlotte begged her father, King Leopold of Belgium, to keep his eye open for a kingdom in need of a king.

Although Maximilian and Charlotte were at first unaware of it, an opportunity for them to rule again suddenly appeared in 1861. In that year Benito Juarez, the President of Mexico, abruptly announced to the world that Mexico would no longer pay off the debts it owed to leading European powers. England, France, and Spain, Mexico's chief creditors, immediately responded to President Juarez's announcement in threatening tones. Together, the three European nations planned a joint expedition to Mexico in which they would seize the money owed them by Mexico.

Louis-Napoleon, the enterprising Emperor of France, planned more drastic steps than merely collecting bad debts. Without the knowledge of England or Spain, Louis-Napoleon plotted to remove Juarez from power and set up a friendly monarchy that would develop Mexico's rich resources and open its doors to French investments.

The time, 1861, was propitious for Louis-Napoleon's secret undertaking. Mexico's powerful neighbor, the United States, had just become involved in a civil war between its Northern and Southern states. Louis-Napoleon hoped that the Southern states would win, but if they did not, it still looked like a long drawn-out war. The Northern states would have their hands full fighting the South and would be unable to prevent Louis-Napoleon from carrying out his scheme in Mexico.

Through secret channels Louis-Napoleon contacted Maximilian to see if the former governor of northern Italy had any interest in becoming the Emperor of Mexico. Although Louis-Napoleon had recently fought a war against Maximilian's brother, Louis-Napoleon had a friendly personal relationship with Maximilian.

Maximilian did not immediately accept Louis-Napoleon's offer, but he did show a definite interest in it. He consulted with his father-in-law, Leopold, King of Belgium. Leopold, who believed that royalty should be active in governing, generally favored Maximilian's acceptance of Louis-Napoleon's offer. The Belgium king, however, cautioned Maximilian on two points. First, Maximilian should obtain Louis-Napoleon's assurance that the French troops which would escort Maximilian into Mexico would remain there as long as Maximilian needed them. Second, Leopold told Maximilian that he should only go to Mexico after he had obtained proof that he was wanted by a majority of Mexicans.

Charlotte had favored acceptance of Louis-Napoleon's offer as soon as it arrived. After her father showed approval

Massachusetts Sir Knight Elected President General of Sons of the American Revolution

Sir Knight Paul H. Walker, a member of Boston Commandery No. 2, has been unanimously elected President General of the Sons of the American Revolution. A Massachusetts attorney, Sir Knight Walker serves the organization as presiding officer in 1992-93.

Several Sir Knights of Massachusetts Commanderies are members of this society of descendants of the loyalists and patriots of the American Revolution.

Virginia Templars Recipients of the Crusading Knight of Siloam Award

This award was established by action of the Grand Commandery of Virginia at its 1990 Annual Conclave to recognize those Sir Knights who have contributed $500 or more to the Knights Templar Eye Foundation over the course of their lives, either through Life Sponsorship; as an Associate Patron or Patron; membership in the Grand Commander's Club, Grand Master's Club, or by any other means.

The name of the award is taken from the miracle of our Savior recorded in the gospel according to St. John, wherein He came upon a blind man, and taking sand and mixing it with His spittle, said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam.' He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing."

A beautiful certificate has been made for this award, some of which have been presented since the award was established.

A jewel, suitable for wear on the uniform, has been designed and has been presented to those qualified by the Grand Commander as he makes his official visits.

Letter To The Editor

I wanted you to know how well a small ad did in the "Knight Voices" section of Knight Templar. My son Paul placed it to keep me happy and busy. That it did!

We have received over 44 boxes, the farthest from Anchorage, Alaska, and as I am legally blind and cannot see to read, my son has sent a thank-you note to each for me.

From February when the ad went in, I have made over 200, 34"x38" lap-robos that have gone to the Florida Masonic Home, 6 nursing homes, a veterans' home and Tampa Cancer Research Center.

I can still use more yarns. I can't see what I've written, so please excuse all errors. My appreciation to you all for allowing this to happen.

Knight Templar regrets lacking the name of this dear lady, the mother of Sir Knight Paul E. Hockett. Eminent Grand Senior Warden of the Grand Commandery of Florida, 2441 Brent Avenue, S. W; Winter Haven; FL 33880-2451. Leftover 4-ply yarn may be sent to this address.

Early in 1992, several uniformed officers of San Antonio Commandery No. 7 appeared at the Alamo in San Antonio to participate in the activities of the Grand Lodge of Texas to commemorate the fall of the Alamo on March 6, 1836, and to honor the many Masons and other heroes who forfeited their lives in defense of that historic place.

The picture above was taken just a few feet from the front doors of the Alamo. The commemorative plaque can be seen between the 3rd and 4th Knights.

The Knights Templar Educational Foundation and the Computer Invasion

by The Reverend Thomas E. Weir, Grand Prelate

Five years ago, the Maryland Division of the Knights Templar Educational Foundation received three requests for financial assistance. There were no deadlines and no published criteria. The cases were considered individually, and there was no reason not to grant them all. By the beginning of 1992, our quiet philanthropy had been invaded by the computer. Entrepreneurs entered our Foundation into lists of organizations that supply money to students. By the middle of 1992, we received more than five hundred requests for applications. Most of these letters said, "Dear Sir or Madam, please send me an application and any further information for your program of financial aid for higher education," and were forwarded to us by Grand Encampment. In addition to the large number received from Grand Encampment, a significant number of telephone and mail requests, generated by computer services, come directly to the Grand Recorder. Few referrals by Sir Knights or school advisors are received. The scope of computer referrals for college financial aid is indicated by the fact that one service, based in Maryland, lists more than twenty-four thousand sources for student aid. Not all referral services are on target. One service sends Maryland requests to the Grand Recorder of Arkansas! He patiently sends them to us.

For the administrator, armed with typewriter and carbon paper, the task of sending all these persons applications, guarantors' statements and promissory notes is overwhelming. Until the end of 1991, Maryland sent each inquirer an application, two promissory notes, two guarantor statements and a letter explaining procedures. In October 1991, we responded to thirty-seven requests (13 pages of printing per request). One of the thirty-seven was filled in and returned. There has to be an easier way.

For Maryland, the answer was to fight the computer invasion with a computer response. An IBM compatible computer has been set up with WordPerfect 5.1, a soft font program and a laser printer. A total of fifteen forms are set up on disk to produce individualized responses to predictable steps in responding to the needs of students. When the responses should be "typed" as a formal letter, a letterhead is printed as part of the form. All letters are designed to fit into window envelopes to avoid typing envelopes separately.

Telephone follow-up suggests that a majority of inquirers expect a scholarship or grant and not a loan. In addition to the response to applications mailed in the latter part of the year, requests for information were only about two per cent. The mailing of as many as one thousand applications and supporting documents per year consuming materials costing $1.37 (not including office expense or labor) and seventeen minutes each to persons who will not significantly respond cannot be justified. A screening process is necessary.

The Grand Commandery of Maryland has therefore set deadlines, similar to those established by trustees of other student assistance programs, for initial inquiry, receipt of application and other steps in the process of evaluation. May 1 was set as the deadline for consideration of requests for the next academic year, for two reasons. First, there are likely to be more funds asked for than available. The Committee may then consider all applicants and choose those who most nearly fit the criteria. Second, funds will be available to the student in time for the beginning of the school year.

A data base (WordPerfect secondary file) is opened for every applicant, regardless of when his inquiry is received, with name, address, and a log of the process in his case. When an inquiry arrives between Christmas and May 1, a letter is sent to explain our program, especially the fact that only loans, not grants, are available. A leaflet setting forth the criteria and procedures for loan application is included. If the applicant feels he meets the criteria, he returns a request for an application. Those who inquire between May 1 and Christmas are sent a postcard telling them that the deadline is past and asking them to reapply "early next year." Nonresidents, those who ask for scholarships, and those who plan for more than two years of college receive postcards explaining why they cannot be considered.

Inquirers who return the "request for application" are furnished with an application, guarantor's statement, promissory note and instructions. When these papers are returned, the applicant is provided with forms to be completed and returned to the administrator. Since receipt of letters of recommendation is the biggest impediment to completing the application, forms are not mailed directly to the references. Instead, the forms are now mailed to the applicant with the advice that he or she explain that the application cannot be considered until the reference is returned.

When the application and supporting papers are completed, a local Commandery is assigned to investigate. When all is in order, the Grand Commandery Division Committee compares applicants, and makes loans according to ranking of applicants, not to exceed funds available for loan.

Any Grand Commandery interested in capitalizing on Maryland's experience may have a copy of all pertinent files and forms on 5^{1/4}" floppy disks for $10.00 postpaid (checks payable to American Institute of Practical Theology, Inc.). Version 2.0 disks are formatted for IBM PC or clone. Three varieties are available:

2.0 (L): Two disks formatted for WordPerfect 5.1 and HP LaserJet II printer.

2.0 (D): Two disks formatted for WordPerfect and dot matrix (Default: Panasonic PX-1124) which may be adapted to other dot matrix printers but still needs WordPerfect 5.1.

2.0 (A): One disk. All files are in ASCII. These files may be imported into any word processor, but WordPerfect features, such as mail merge, are necessarily lost.

Those with personal computers other than IBM PC type may, I understand, import the program by having it sent in via modem.

Printing the descriptive leaflet by LaserJet is recommended. Files to print the leaflet with WordPerfect and HP LaserJet II have been added to the dot matrix and ASCII versions.

You may be interested in our statistics. 372 inquiries were received between Christmas 1991 and May 1, 1992. Each inquirer was sent a letter and a descriptive leaflet. Of these, eleven asked for scholarships, seven each were nonresidents or planned more than two years more college. Between May 1 and July 1, 108 late inquiries were received. Six months total queries: 505.

373 information leaflets were mailed out. 64 were returned, and 64 sets of applications and supporting documents were sent out. Eight applications were filled out and returned. For three petitioners, no letters of recommendation were returned. One application provided one letter of recommendation.

Out of 505 possible candidates, only four produced applications which the Committee could consider. Two loans were approved. One loan was approved subject to replacement of a promissory note altered to read, "repay when I get a full-time job." One application did not meet the criteria. The Maryland committee feels that our process is both efficient and effective.

Edson Fitch (1838-1906)

by Sir Knight James R. Case, KTCH

Matches by the million was the annual production of this pioneer in the "splint industry." Every pipe smoking habitant' in Canada welcomed the development of the friction match, as a means of keeping his continual and comforting companion conveniently lit.

"He was the only American citizen, retaining his allegiance as such, who ever occupied the Grand East of Masonry in a British Possession" as Grand Master of Masons in the Province of Quebec 1901-1902, according to Fitch's eulogist. No doubt his pride of ancestry and his Civil War pension were persuasive factors in his decision. But Masonry ignores international bounds.

Edson Fitch was descended from an early governor of colonial Connecticut, the family homestead in Norwalk at one time being the joint property of his sister and himself. However, he was born in Glens Falls, New York, and had just concluded his formal schooling and reached a point where he was to enter the business world when war broke out between the states.

On November 1st, 1861, he was mustered into the army at Bolton Landing as a lieutenant in the 43rd New York Volunteer Infantry, the "Washington County Regiment." First in action during the Peninsula campaigns, he was handed a Christmas present in 1863, being promoted to captain. He was wounded at the head of his company during fighting in the wilderness, and on return to duty was given responsible staff assignments until his discharge.

He was made a Mason in Senate Lodge No. 456 at Glens Falls before he went off to war, and was Raised July 6, 1862, probably when home on leave.

In 1867 he went to Canada with the intention of entering business as a producer of "match splints," at a time when the household friction match had been greatly improved and was much in demand for many uses.

Fitch saw his factory destroyed by fire on two occasions, but his indomitable pluck and perseverance" carried him through to a point where his establishment was the "largest of its kind in the world, making 90 million matches in a single day," employing 500 hands in all departments and using no less than seventy million feet of lumber in a single year.

Soon after arrival at Quebec, he was Exalted in Stadacona Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and became Grand Principal S of the Grand Chapter. In due course he was accorded the Orders of Masonic Knighthood in William de la More the Martyr, Preceptory of Quebec.

In 1873 he affiliated with Tuscan Lodge No. 28 in Levis, serving as Master in 1876. Grand Lodge service was almost continuous, as he was a district deputy, member of a variety of committees and boards, and progressed through the several stations until his election as Grand Master.

He had established himself in business and banking circles in Quebec City, was a director of the Quebec & Levis Ferry Company, and for several years was President of the Masonic Hall Association. He was a lover of the great open spaces and interested in fish and game conservation. His many quiet acts of charity became known after his death, the nature and extent being widespread and liberal before his death and before his three score years and ten had been completed. He had no children.

"A lover of truth and honor ... one who hated falsehood and deceit... loyal to his friends... exemplary in his daily life and conduct... one who manifested by his deeds those truly Masonic ornaments of Brotherhood and Benevolence" - the whole city grieved to see him go.

Knight Templar is proud to posthumously publish this article by Sir Knight and Masonic scholar, James R. Case, KTCH, a longtime contributor to Knight Templar Magazine.

General Chairman of the Mexican venture, subject to his two important provisos, Charlotte became enthusiastic about the prospect of moving to Mexico.

Following Leopold's advice, Maximilian obtained Louis-Napoleon's promise of continued French military support in Mexico. Maximilian also followed Leopold's instructions by telling a delegation of Mexicans that he would require evidence of strong support among the Mexican populace before he could accept their offer to be their emperor.

While Louis-Napoleon was trying to obtain Maximilian's consent to be the Emperor of Mexico, the military forces of England, Spain, and France landed at Vera Cruz on the eastern shore of Mexico. The English and Spanish had come to Mexico only to collect the money owed them by Juarez. When, however, it became clear that the French intended a major conquest of Mexico, the English and Spanish withdrew from the expedition. The French, thirty thousand strong, pushed on into the interior, taking the capital, Mexico City, and then spreading out to subdue the rest of the nation. As the French advanced, Mexican President Juarez and his republican forces retreated gradually north toward the United States' border.

In every town which they captured, the French, with their guns and bayonets poised, rounded up Mexicans like cattle and forced them to sign petitions beseeching Maximilian to come to Mexico and be their emperor. The petitions were taken back to Europe and shown to Maximilian and Charlotte. She wrote excitedly to a friend, "They want us ardently."

Louis-Napoleon had now met both the requirements stipulated by Charlotte's father: a promise to keep French forces in Mexico as long as Maximilian might require them, and evidence that the Mexican people sincerely wanted

Maximilian as their emperor. Although Maximilian still had doubts and fears about the unusual enterprise he was undertaking, Charlotte's enthusiasm for the project more than overcame her husband's hesitancy.

In the summer of 1863 a Mexican National Assembly formally declared that Maximilian was the Emperor of Mexico. At the same time, fears that the United States would finish fighting the Civil War, and then drive the French army out of Mexico, increased when the North won two great battles at Gettysburg and Vicksburg.

In the spring of 1864, Maximilian and Charlotte set sail for their Mexican empire. Before crossing the Atlantic they stopped in Rome to receive the blessing of the Pope, Pius IX.

After a warm welcome in Vera Cruz the royal couple made the arduous journey to Mexico City. In the capital they were given an imperial reception. The Emperor and Empress were reminded, however, that they were no longer living in a European culture when a native woman, instead of curtsying to Her Imperial Majesty, embraced Charlotte in a bear hug. Charlotte at first recoiled, but then quickly recovered her composure.

Maximilian and Charlotte spent their first night in the capital in the Presidential Palace, where they found the vermin and bedbugs so plentiful in their beds that Maximilian took refuge on a billiard table.

The Emperor and Empress devoted most of their time to getting acquainted with the people and understanding their ways. The Emperor traveled around the country bordering Mexico City. Visiting an Indian chief, Maximilian slept on the ground near the chief's campfire. In a letter to an old friend he wrote proudly that he and Charlotte were getting to be "regular Mexicans." He showed his identification with the Mexican people by dressing like them, in a white suit topped by a sombrero.

Just as he had tried in Italy to come to terms with Italian nationalists, Maximilian tried in Mexico to befriend and collaborate with his republican adversaries. He expressed democratic sentiments. He pardoned radicals who had been imprisoned. He even wrote a letter of reconciliation to President Juarez, who had taken refuge from the French army in northern Mexico. Hoping to unify the country, Maximilian offered to take Juarez into the imperial government. Juarez disdainfully rejected Maximilian's offer.

Maximilian tried to raise the cultural level of the Mexican people by organizing a National Theater in Mexico City. He built a museum in which to display ancient Mexican art. He restored palaces and old Spanish churches.

He also encouraged scientific investigation by founding the Imperial Mexican Academy of Sciences and the Mexican Society of Geography and Statistics. A naturalist, Maximilian was delighted by the wide variety of birds and butterflies he found in Mexico.

Because of his earlier interest in navigation he authorized the building of an observatory. He purchased a few ships to create a Mexican navy.

Charlotte meanwhile tried to encourage financiers to invest in the development of Mexico's rich natural resources. After her rough journey from Vera Cruz to Mexico City on their arrival in Mexico, she was very interested in getting a road-building program underway. She was instrumental in setting up a public transportation system in Mexico City. After witnessing widespread disease and inadequate sewer facilities, she became a crusader for improvements in public health.

In spite of her achievements in many fields, Charlotte felt like a failure in one of her most basic duties as Empress; she was unable to produce an heir to the imperial crown.

Maximilian and Charlotte also failed in another important area; building a native Mexican army capable of protecting the new Empire if the French armed forces would ever depart.

Moreover, they did not succeed in making their government financially solvent, capable of paying its way without being subsidized by French loans.

Since, however, Louis-Napoleon had assured Maximilian that the French would continue and support the Mexican Empire as long as necessary, Maximilian and Charlotte felt fairly secure.

Then, one year after the arrival of Maximilian and Charlotte in Mexico, the Civil War in the United States ended in a total victory for the North. The victors made it clear concerning their opposition to the existence of a European Monarchy south of the Rio Grande. Both Maximilian and Louis-Napoleon were turned down in their requests for American recognition of the Mexican Empire.
