The heraldic banner and trumpet exhibit the symbols of Bill Terry's productive life. The Tennessee mocking bird is reminiscent of his aggressive drive to succeed.
The 35th Annual Voluntary Campaign of the Knights Templar Eye Foundation has come to a close. I congratulate all those who participated in this annual fundraising event. The Knights Templar Eye Foundation, Inc., will certainly be able to use all of the contributions sent in during this time. There are always many people who need our help to preserve their sight.

The Grand Commandery of Iowa has always been very generous in their giving to the Eye Foundation. The past year they shared in a special program at the University of Iowa to assist patients with low vision. If their contribution to that program had been eligible for credit in the Voluntary Campaign, they would have ranked near the top. I am sure that all the patients in Iowa who received help with vision aids this year were happy that the Sir Knights of Iowa were able to provide funds for them.

On June 1, I will be returning from an official visit to Wasilla/Palmer Commandery, U.D., in Alaska. The Sir Knights who are members there would like to receive their charter at the 62nd Triennial Conclave. If this happens, Alaska may request a charter as a Grand Commandery. My next visit will be to the Grand Commandery of Michigan in Battle Creek, Michigan. The following week I will be in Peoria for the Grand Imperial Council of the Red Cross of Constantine. My last Regional York Rite Conference as Grand Master will be held in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, June 19 and 20.

Don't forget to register and attend the 62nd Triennial Conclave to be held at the Adam's Mark Hotel in St. Louis, August 16-20. The hotel telephone number is 1-800-444-ADAM. We are going to have a great time! Come and be a part of this exciting event!

Message from the General Chairman
The 35th Annual Voluntary Campaign
by Sir Knight W. Bruce Pruitt, P.D.C. and P.G.C. (California)
Chairman of the Annual Voluntary Campaign

Dear Sir Knights and Ladies,

This month’s picture is of one of our senior officers, "galloping along" with his lovely daughter during a time when he was about 35 years old. I am told that a friend of the family gave the young lady two ponies in exchange for a special bill cap that she had. Either that must have been some bill cap, or he was awfully anxious to get rid of the ponies! Regardless of the circumstances, I'll bet they had lots of fun with the "surrey with the fringe on top." I'll give you a hint as to who that young gentleman is - in those days he had hair!

The 35th Annual Voluntary Campaign is now history. I want to thank all of you who made contributions to this Campaign and thank you for your continued allegiance to our Knights Templar Eye Foundation. The final results will be printed in the July 2003 issue of the magazine.

In any case, there are some important things we can still consider.

First of all, I want to comment on something that has recently come to my attention; it seems some members of our order think that they do not need to make a contribution during the Voluntary Campaign.

I sincerely wish I had been made aware of this situation sooner so that we could have cleared up possible misunderstandings. Hopefully, these remarks will help in future years. They concern the matter of the "Life Sponsorship" status that is available for a one-time $30 contribution. As you are all aware, every Commandery is obligated to submit a one-dollar amount for each Sir Knight on the rolls, except for those who have purchased a "Life Sponsorship." That Life Sponsorship excuses the Commandery from the assessment; however, it does NOT excuse the individual Knight from his obligation to make a contribution. It seems that some folks consider the Life Sponsorship to be the same as a life membership for their Lodge or Commandery. The think it means their obligation is over forever. Sir Knights, such is not the case. It excuses the Commanders but not the individual.

The same might be said for other special memberships, such as the Grand Commander's Club, Grand Master's Club, 33° Club, etc. All of those one-time gifts are important and gratefully received, but they hold their own reward. I hope there are not too many people who have this attitude, but I have learned there are some. If everyone took the position that a one-time sponsorship excused him from all future obligations, our Knights Templar Eye Foundation would be in really bad shape.

Another subject on my mind is the 33° Club. I must admit that I was not sure if it would continue to be of interest beyond the 33rd Voluntary Campaign. It obviously is, and that is great. We are happy to continue to recognize our Scottish Rite Brothers who have attained that significant position. Since more 33° Scottish Rite Masons are elevated each year, we will continue to make the club available to honor them as long as desired.

I also want to remind everyone to look closely at the per capita contribution from their Grand Commandery. If it is not up to the goal of $5 per person, that means you have lots to do for next year. For example, I had a very casual lunch with friends today, eating only a nice salad with a glass of tea. The bill, including tip, came to $12.00. Can't we all afford a little less than half of a casual lunch for our Eye Foundation? If I don't leave you with any stronger message, I would want it to be this: Everyone in the Grand Encampment has an obligation to encourage everyone else to do his part for the Eye Foundation. The Eye Foundation should be mentioned at every meeting and given space in every bulletin.

Thank you again for all you have done in the past from me, from my Lady Shirley, and from the Sir Knight and daughter trotting along in the "surrey with the fringe on top." Oh, yes - he is none other than Sir Knight William Koon, our Grand Captain General. Thanks, Bill, for a cute picture.

God bless you all,

Bruce

Here's Why We Support the Knights Templar Eye Foundation!

Thank you very much for making it possible for me to have eye surgery. I had a cataract removed from each eye. The surgery went well, and I have my new glasses. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your help. God bless you.

Carol M. Miller, Evansville, Indiana

I would sincerely like to thank you and all those involved in helping people like my mother, Martimiana Herrera. I am writing on her behalf to thank you. We would not have been able to afford her surgery without your foundation, which helps people see again and enjoy life. My mother feels better about herself now. She feels more secure and is much happier. We thank you for this! Thank you, Knights Templar Eye Foundation and Dr. James A. Bentley, Jr., and his staff!

Beatriz Herrera, Garland, Texas

I am letting you know that my surgery went well. I surely do appreciate what you have done for me, and I thank you very much!

Barbara Mehren, Spencer, Iowa

I am deeply grateful to the Foundation for helping me with the surgical and doctors' bills. A nice lady at the Cape Girardeau, Missouri, Eye Care Center told me about the KTEF. Thanks from the bottom of my heart to your foundation and to Dr. Dave Westrich, who performed the surgery, and his staff at St. Francis Hospital.

The Unfinished Work
by Brother C. Bruce Hunter

It is common knowledge that Freemasons claim descent from the stonemasons who built Gothic cathedrals during the Middle Ages. Of course, the last of the medieval masons died centuries ago, but one aspect of their legacy is still with us. If we visit those old cathedrals today, we often find them adorned with scaffolds.

This is not surprising. Any building, especially an old one, needs a little patching up now and then. But there is another reason the people who use cathedrals keep working on them.

A cathedral is different from other structures because of what it represents. It isn't just a building made of stone. It is also an expression of spiritual questing, of reaching out for God. And while the process of erecting a building is supposed to come to an end at some point in time, the spiritual quest never stops.

When the medieval masons built the Gothic cathedrals, they didn't have detailed blueprints like the ones builders use today. They laid out a floor plan on the ground and drew an "elevation," which was basically a picture of how they wanted the finished product to look. Then, they recruited members of the community to help with the work and began construction, sometimes little by little as money and labor became available. As a result, some cathedrals took centuries to reach the form they have today.

But the funny thing is, the process those builders started has never stopped. It's as if once they began working on their cathedral, the people couldn't bring themselves to step back and say, "It's finished."

The Masonic initiation is not unlike the early stages of erecting one of those cathedrals. It is intended to serve as a "beginning." It gives us a start - a mere foundation - and it provides an impression of what the project will look like as we continue to build. But it doesn't give us a stopping point, nor does it tell us when the job will be finished.

Like working on a cathedral, even if we think our spiritual quest has reached a conclusion, we can't bring ourselves to step back and say, "It's finished." As long as we live, there is always something more to do.

Freemasonry Through the Eyes of a Senior Warden

This article was written by Brother Michael M. Rush, Senior Warden of Verona Lodge No. 548, Free and Accepted Masons of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, and expresses his views of what might be conveyed to any man interested in knowing some of the background and activities of the world's oldest fraternity, known as "Freemasonry."

I. WHAT IS FREEMASONRY?

This, I feel, is the most pertinent question asked by those interested in becoming Freemasons? What IS Freemasonry, anyway? Is it a group of secretive men who wear strange-looking clothing and hold meetings behind closed doors? Is it a club or a social organization like the one Uncle Ted belonged to when he was with Rotary? Are not the Masons those men who use funny handshakes and whisper strange words to one another?

Paradoxically, this question is both very simple, yet very difficult to answer. It is simple in that countless scholars, researchers, writers, and commentators - be they Masonic or not - have supplied the definition of what they think constitutes Freemasonry. It is difficult because, though these definitions may have been correct in themselves, none has ever been comprehensive and complete. If you ask one hundred different Masons what their Fraternity is, you are liable to get one hundred different answers. We can say that Freemasonry is the world's oldest and largest, secular, fraternal organization. One definition of Freemasonry is that it is "a beautiful system of morality, veiled in allegory, and illustrated by symbols." The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania affirms that "Freemasonry Is A Way Of Life," and defines it thusly: "Freemasonry is kindness in the home, honesty in business, courtesy in society, fairness in work, pity and concern for the unfortunate, resistance toward evil, help for the weak, forgiveness for the penitent, love for one another, and above all reverence and love for God." Brother Rudyard Kipling described Freemasonry as "an ancient order dedicated to the brotherhood of all mankind under the all-seeing eye of God." While Freemasonry IS all of the above, it is also a forum, a place, and even a refuge for upright, like-minded men to gather for fraternal fellowship and camaraderie. Ultimately, though, each Brother - and that, ultimately, is what we are, Brothers - will develop his OWN definition of Freemasonry - as unique and individual as himself:

II. WHAT FREEMASONRY IS NOT

Firstly, it must be emphatically stated that Freemasonry is NOT a religion. Many self-appointed critics of our Craft have alleged - quite erroneously - that Freemasonry is a religion or attempts to be a religion. This is not the case. Masonry is religious in character: any candidate wishing to join the Fraternity cannot be an atheist. The centerpiece of a Masonic lodge is its Volume of Sacred Law; be it the Bible, the Torah, the Koran, the Vedas, or any recognized body of sacred scripture. Freemasonry inculcates moral virtues and reminds us of the duties we owe to God and Man, in that Freemasonry believes in the Brotherhood of Man under the Fatherhood of God. Unlike formally constituted religious denominations, however, Freemasonry does not offer a plan for salvation, nor does it offer forgiveness. The Craft does not ordain anyone in the ministry, and it does not offer sacraments. Freemasonry strongly encourages each Brother to attend his own house of worship or privately cultivate his religious beliefs. The Craft views itself as a complement to religion, not a replacement for it.
Secondly, Freemasonry is not a benefits, insurance or charitable organization, such as the Order of Foresters or the Saint Vincent de Paul society. However, I assure you that, while Freemasonry is not intrinsically a charitable organization, it does practice great acts of charity. Freemasonry; which has been called "the world's greatest philanthropy," gives almost $5 million dollars every day to causes such as running hospitals for burned and physically impaired children, treating eye diseases, operating centers for learning-impaired youngsters and those with language disorders, furnishing dental care to handicapped children, and providing visitation services and assistance to those men and women who are residents of our Veterans Administration hospitals.

Thirdly, Freemasonry is not a political organization.

Lastly, Freemasonry is most assuredly NOT a secret society. The only "secrets" utilized in Freemasonry are the words and signs of recognition. Masonic lodges exist in communities throughout the United States. Thousands of books, pamphlets, and periodicals describing the Craft have been published in the previous three hundred years, some of which purport to contain the rituals used by the Craft. Any interested person with access to the Internet can access an almost limitless number of Web sites with information about Freemasonry;

III HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY (WORLD)

No one can say with certainty when Freemasonry was first constituted, and no individual or group can be credited with its formation. Some scholars believe its origins can be traced to the Egyptian mystery schools, some five thousand years ago. Other commentators believe Freemasonry is an outgrowth of the Roman Collegia of Artificers or Comacines, who were operative craftsmen in wood and stone and who traveled with the Roman legions, erecting structures in newly conquered territories. Still others believe that we, as SPECULATIVE (or philosophical) Freemasons, are an outgrowth of medieval European guilds of OPERATIVE stonemasons, who labored at erecting the great cathedrals and whose ranks were eventually overtaken by the learned men of England and the European continent, who were attracted by the scientific, architectural, and geometric disciplines used in cathedral-building. Some writers believe that today's Masons are, in fact, the "progeny" of the brutally suppressed order of Crusading warrior-monks known as the Knights Templar. Perhaps, some degree of truth is contained in all these theories.

Whichever point of origin you choose to believe, it can be said with certainty that the oldest document currently available in which Masonry is mentioned is the "Regius Poem"; it dates from approximately 1390. Though there are references to the founding of a Grand Lodge at York, England, in the year A.D. 926, Masonic scholar, Brother H.V.B. Voorhis, dismisses this as an unsubstantiated tradition. The oldest existing lodge record is that of Edinburgh Lodge No. 1 and dates from July 30, 1599. The first recognizable grand lodge of speculative masons was organized in the city of London, England, in the year 1717. The Grand Lodge of Ireland was created eight years later in 1725.

Memphis Bill Terry:

Polo Grounds – Part I

A public figure with great ability must submit to the scrutiny of the news media willingly and with absolute candor, if he wishes to avoid being pilloried by representatives of the working press. It has always been so in the area of professional sports. In baseball circles several of the greatest stars have endured constant negative press because they resisted the insatiable demands of sports reporters that they respond to the most audacious questions. The names of Ty Cobb, Rogers Hornsby, and Ted Williams leap to mind immediately. Add the name of William Harold Terry to that list. All of the above suffered enduring criticism throughout their careers for violating the mantra of the media: "The public has a right to know."

Without a doubt adversity plays a major role in forging the character and personality of some individuals. Many break under personal circumstances and fail to achieve a great deal in life beyond survival. A few rise above poverty and lack of guidance to find that inner spark which will elevate them to greatness. The metamorphosis sometimes leaves the person with an acerbic edge to his personality, which rejects curious personal scrutiny. It is a price most of them are willing to pay for privacy.

Bill Terry did not have much of a childhood. He could never remember when his parents got along, and it was inevitable they would go their separate ways while he was very young. The youngster was relegated to the custody of his mother when that occurred. Terry never discussed his early life, except to comment on how quickly he became self-reliant. He quit school to support himself when he was 13 years of age. Within two years he was "holding down a man's job."

William Harold Terry was born on October 30, 1898, in Atlanta, Georgia. He loved baseball from the beginning, and it didn't take long to realize that he possessed a natural talent for the game. In addition to playing ball, Bill was working full time as a freight handler for the railroad when he was 15 years old. It was hard, grueling labor, and the job required an adult with both physical and mental maturity. He still found time to become an outstanding baseball star on the sandlot fields of Atlanta. A strapping youngster physically, he would eventually mature into a 200-pound batting star, but he would never be renowned as a long-ball hitter. Swinging a 42-ounce war club, Terry batted and threw left handed and was six feet, one and a half inches tall. Although a great natural hitter, his earliest reputation was earned as a pitcher, a very effective one. At the tender age of 15, he caught the attention of a St. Louis Browns' scout and was offered a contract.

The big-league offer was a spring-training tryout in 1914. The Browns failed to follow through on their proposition, mailing Terry his release without granting him the proposed evaluation. Undismayed, he turned to the low minor-leagues for training, beginning the 1915 season with Thomasville of the Georgia State League. He was convinced his most promising source of income was in professional baseball. After the season was under way, he moved up to Newman in the Georgia-Alabama League. Terry joined the Newman team in August. The 16-year-old port-sider pitched in 8 games, winning 6, with one of them a no-hitter. It was an impressive beginning, which did not pass unnoticed. During the winter of 1915-1916, his contract was sold to Shreveport of the Texas League. Terry began the 1916 season with Shreveport, which started as a hand-to-mouth existence for the young pitcher. He was focused on financial stability, a goal which included marriage and normal family life. He had met Elvina Sneed, the daughter of an established and respected family in Memphis, Tennessee; however, the marriage did not take place until November 1917 for obvious reasons: Before Terry could support a wife, he needed a reliable source of income. Years later, he admitted he was forced to pawn the engagement ring he had purchased for Elvina, in order to pay expenses while awaiting his first Shreveport salary check. Nevertheless, Terry survived to become a promising young pitcher and a superlative hitter in professional baseball.

Bill played two full seasons for the Shreveport club. By the end of the 1917 season, the United States was involved in World War I, and professional baseball was plagued with falling attendance and the loss of many players to military service. Terry's contract was sold to the Little Rock, Arkansas team at the end of the 1917 season. Disgusted with constant travel, low pay, and second-rate accommodations; Bill announced he was leaving professional baseball to take a job with Standard Oil in Memphis, Tennessee. He dismissed his substantial reputation as a fine pitcher and an outstanding hitter with an assured future in the major leagues. The Little Rock manager, Kid Elberfield, a former infield great with the Detroit Tigers and New York Yankees, urged Terry to remain in baseball, to no avail. Bill announced to all interested parties that he would consider playing major league ball only when the sport recovered from the trauma of World War I and if he was assured a salary sufficient to make it worthwhile. As WWI ended, Terry was firmly established with the Standard Oil Company in Memphis, Tennessee.
He pitched for their corporate industrial-league baseball team, playing first base when not scheduled to take the mound. The Standard Oil Polarines were already a fine industrial league club before Terry came aboard. After he arrived, they were unbeatable. He soon became manager of the Polarines, while continuing to terrorize the league with his fearsome hitting feats and pitching dominance. He also applied himself to learning the oil business and mastering its financial details. In the process he proved himself an apt pupil who soon developed into an astute business man. His investment acumen would make him a wealthy man by the end of the 1930s decade.

In spite of Terry's reputation in the major leagues as a truculent individual, he did not leave that impression with the Memphis community. He was a hard-working, no-nonsense young man with a promising future and one who enjoyed the adoration of the Memphis baseball fans. He was the father of a young son, William Harold, Jr., a devoted family man, and a prominent, churchgoing member of the Memphis community.

In 1922 Bill Terry became a Freemason in Germantown Lodge No. 95 in Memphis. He received his EA Degree on November 11, 1921 and his FC Degree on December 15. He was Raised a Master Mason on January 31, 1922. In 1923 he affiliated with Park Avenue Lodge No. 362 in Memphis, by demit. He joined the A.A.S.R. in 1923 and Al Chymia Shrine in 1926, both in Memphis. Brother Terry became a 50-year Scottish Rite Mason in 1973 and a life member of the Shrine in 1961. It is worthy of note that he also became an associate member of Morocco Temple of the Shrine at Jacksonville, Florida, in 1972.

Terry was with Standard Oil four years before baseball's major leagues came knocking on his door. He was 24 years old and perfectly happy with his advancing career. Tom Watkins, owner of the Memphis Chicks, a team in the Southern Association, was well acquainted with Bill Terry. He would have been delighted to add the young pitcher/first baseman to his playing roster, but he was unable to pay the salary necessary to lure Terry from...
Standard Oil. Watkins called his old friend, John McGraw, long-time manager of the New York Giants. He recommended McGraw consider a meeting with the young Polarine star. McGraw was particularly interested in Terry's famous batting achievements.

The meeting between Terry and McGraw occurred in February 1922. It was mildly unpleasant. Bill was unimpressed with the gruff McGraw and well aware of his reputation as a hard taskmaster. When asked if he would like to come to New York to play, Terry's typical laconic response was "How much?" McGraw was irritated by the terse answer. Bill went on to explain that he wasn't interested in McGraw's offer unless he was guaranteed more than he was earning at Standard Oil. He concluded the interview with the remark: "You can reach me in care of Standard Oil."

Three weeks later, Terry received a telegram from McGraw offering a salary of $5,000 per year and a guarantee that his contract would be retained by the Giants. Assured that he would have a genuine opportunity of success in the major leagues, Terry accepted. He was instructed to report to the Toledo, Ohio, Mudhens of the American Association (Triple-A) at the beginning of spring training in 1923. He would be groomed primarily as a first baseman. Nevertheless, he pitched in 26 games for Toledo in 1924, posting a record of 9 wins against 9 losses. Terry's batting average of .335 with 14 home runs was of primary interest to John McGraw. He ordered Memphis Bill to New York to finish the last few games of the season as a pinch-hitter. Terry appeared in only three games but sat beside McGraw on the Giants' bench and had his first taste of major league play.

Terry found formidable competition to overcome in his quest to be the regular first baseman for the New York Giants. George "High Pockets" Kelly was in the midst of a fine career as the Giants' sterling first-base caretaker and would not be easy to displace. During the 1924 season, Bill played only 77 games. He was irritable and disappointed on the bench, and his batting average reflected his frustration. He hit only .239 for the season. Terry repeatedly questioned McGraw's motives for not using him in the outfield or in the pitching rotation. His answer was "Your time will come."

Memphis Bill's season highlight occurred after the Giants won the National League pennant in 1924 during the World Series.
The Giants faced the Washington Senators in the World Series in 1924. Bucky Harris, the 27-year-old manager of the Senators, had completed his first year at the helm and was prepared to battle the Giants to the death in the Series. It was a hard-fought, 7-game affair, which the Giants lost primarily through defensive miscues. Third-baseman Fred Lindstrom missed a ground-ball, throwing the seventh game into extra innings, and catcher Hank Gowdy dropped a critical foul ball in the same contest. As it turned out, the Senators took the series 4 games to 3. Terry was the Giants' batting star in the Series and eligible for a full share of World Series earnings.

McGraw's assurances became true in 1925, when Terry displaced High Pockets Kelly as the regular first baseman. Memphis Bill responded by delivering a sparkling fielding season at first base, while posting a batting mark of .319. In order to keep Kelly in the lineup, McGraw moved him to second base.

Personal relations between McGraw and Terry never improved. They began on a frosty note, and over time the relationship deteriorated. Withdrawn and touchy, Terry made no attempt to ameliorate the situation. Likewise, he was grumpy with sports writers who approached him. Baseball was strictly business to Bill Terry; and money was the name of the game. He never allowed the Giants' owner, Charles Stoneham, to forget that at contract time. From the beginning of his major league career, Terry was among the highest-paid athletes in baseball.

After the regular season was over, most baseball players looked forward to a pleasant winter of relaxation and enjoyment. Not so with Terry; He habitually returned to Memphis and resumed sales duties with Standard Oil there. He expanded his business activity into real estate, financial investments, several auto repair and service station operations, and a string of car-wash establishments around Memphis. One well remembered enterprise was the Bill Terry Auto Laundry at 1750 Madison. By the end of the 1930s, Bill and Elvina, along with their growing family, lived in an impressive estate on the outskirts of Memphis. Over the years, Terry remained the darling of Memphis sports fans and responded generously to public recognition as their adopted hero. Memphis Bill proved to be the quintessential family man and citizen. Eventually, he and Elvina became parents of three sons and a daughter; William Harold, Jr., Ray, Kenn, and Marjorie. Active in civic affairs as his schedule permitted, Bill was also a devoted member of the Episcopal Church. In that capacity, he served as a vestryman and sang in the choir.

During the balance of the 1920s decade, Bill Terry's career reached its zenith. The Giants were continuously in the first division of the National League and in contention for the pennant. The exception was 1926, when the team slipped into a fifth-place finish with Terry's average declining to .289 over a total of 98 games. His playing time was divided between first base and the outfield. By 1927 Memphis Bill was back on the high road for good. He played 150 games and posted a fine batting mark of .326. That became the first of six consecutive years in which Terry would record 100 or more runs batted in during the season, and it was the beginning of ten successive years in which he batted over .300. The same year the legendary Rogers Hornsby came to the Giants to replace High Pockets Kelly.

In spite of his fabulous batting record and sterling field leadership, Hornsby was one of the most-traveled superstars in baseball. He was excessively blunt, tactless, and outspoken. His abrasive manner made him one of the most disliked men in baseball, even though he was one of its most gifted practitioners.

Many fans regarded him as McGraw's intended successor. Obviously, with McGraw and Terry already entrenched at New York's Polo Grounds, the addition of Hornsby gave them the most volatile mix of personalities in the big leagues. Notwithstanding, they made up a fabled infield comprised exclusively of future Hall-of-Fame members. With Terry at first base, Hornsby at second base, Travis Jackson at shortstop, and Fred Lindstrom at third; the Giants had the finest infield in baseball.

By the time the 1928 season opened, Hornsby was gone - traded to the Boston Braves for catcher Francis "Shanty" Hogan and big money. Terry continued to star on the field and in the batter's box, posting an average of .326 over 149 games. He boosted his performance considerably in 1929 by etching an impressive .372 over 150 games. Although in pennant contention throughout the year, McGraw's team would never win another pennant under his guidance. His final pennant came in 1924, and by 1929 McGraw's health was declining rapidly. That was the year the Great Depression was launched with a catastrophic stock market collapse in October. All of baseball's great thinkers anticipated rocky financial days ahead and searched for a solution to keep attendance and fan enthusiasm at a high level. The agreed solution was to inject additional "life" into the ball itself.

A more lively ball was a boon to hitters. Averages soared throughout both leagues in 1930. As a group, National League batters posted a collective .303 average, a mark never again reached in overall league batting. Memphis Bill led the pack all the way. It was his finest year, ending with a batting mark of .401, a National League record unequaled since that banner year. Terry scored 139 runs, had 129 runs batted in, and won the National League batting championship; along with its Most Valuable Player Award. The Giants hit for a collective average of .319, still a major league team record. In spite of the awesome batting performances in 1930, the Giants finished the year in third place.

Some of the life was taken out of the ball in 1931, but it was barely noticeable in Terry's performance. He was edged out of a second batting championship by Chick Haley of the St. Louis Cardinals, by a very narrow percentage margin (.3489 to .3486). The torrid batting performances of the previous year slowed noticeably around the major leagues. Veteran spitball pitcher, Burleigh Grimes, sneered: "It's amazing how much better the pitching was in 1931."

At the Polo Grounds the atmosphere was strained as a result of an on-going feud between manager John McGraw and Memphis Bill Terry. Not a word passed between the manager and his first-base star for a year and a half. McGraw had launched a scathing personal attack on Terry following a losing game. His clubhouse tirade was delivered in the presence of the entire team. Terry responded furiously to McGraw's remarks and a loud, abusive exchange ensued. Their mutual antipathy boiled over in a nasty public confrontation. Fortunately, personal feelings had no effect on Terry's field performance, although he made no secret that he thought McGraw's leadership ability eroding.

McGraw's failing health was apparent to everyone in the club. His lack of vitality eventually contributed to a general deterioration of morale, and the Giants went into a prolonged slump. Although the Giants finished the 1931 season in second place, they were 13 games behind at the close and fading rapidly. During the winter of 1931-1932, a rumor circulated that McGraw would soon retire. Third baseman Fred Lindstrom, a particular favorite of the gruff, outspoken McGraw, was regarded as his probable successor.

The economic depression was in full swing by the winter of 1931-1932. Charles Stoneham was gravely concerned over a serious decline in attendance throughout major league baseball, which had transmitted into a radical income shortfall. Everywhere in the business sector, the word was out to cut costs drastically to survive. Stoneham and McGraw decided that Bill Terry's salary, one of the largest in the National League, must be reduced to reflect the economic hardships of the day. When Memphis Bill received his 1932 contract in the mail, he was shocked and angered by a forty per cent reduction in salary. He mailed the contract back to New York unsigned. He was an official holdout. It was only one of many contract disputes between Terry and the Giant front office, but it was the most vitriolic. Terry's belligerent rejection of Stoneham's offer angered the Giant president, who was the major stockholder. Normally, the Giant owner was a retiring individual who avoided the public eye. On that occasion, he went to the media to plead his case and state his opinion about Terry's contract dispute. Back in Memphis Terry shrugged off the hostile publicity unleashed by Stoneham and McGraw. He simply would not play with the proposed reduction in salary. His business interests in Memphis demanded his attention, anyway.

As spring training began, Terry's attitude remained unchanged. It was apparent that it would stay that way. It became patently obvious to all concerned that, if the Giants wanted their star player on the roster in 1932, they must meet his demands. Stoneham capitulated, but the air of hostility between Memphis Bill and the front office remained. Stoneham's remark to Terry that he had been unable to trade him to any team in the league, because of his large salary; did little to assuage Terry's ruffled feelings. He proved that the game was a business to him, and he would not play unless the money was there. Spring training in 1932 was predictably somber.

At the training camp in March 1932, McGraw became ill and returned to New York. He struggled to function as field manager for the beginning of the season, hanging on until June 3rd. A double-header was rained out that day, and the cancellation order was issued. Another notice was posted on the bulletin board in the deserted club house, to the effect that Bill Terry was assuming McGraw's post as manager of the Giants. One lone reporter walked into the club house, hoping to pick up some news item. He became the first member of the press to learn of the managerial switch. It was a blockbuster story; and Tom Meaney of the New York World Telegraph had stumbled upon an exclusive. The entire baseball world was stunned by the news. McGraw was not only manager of the Giants, he was a vice president with a substantial block of club stock. He had been a manager for 31 years, the longest tenure in baseball history, with the exception of the Philadelphia Athletics' Connie Mack.

McGraw had offered the job to Memphis Bill on the evening of June 2. After being assured that he would have full authority on the field, control of player trades, and a guarantee of no front office interference; Terry accepted. He had no difficulty in negotiating a lucrative contract. The entire process was a tribute to John McGraw's devotion to the best interests of his beloved Giants. He selected the man he felt most qualified to manage the club, even though he disliked him intensely. Terry assumed control immediately, and McGraw never again entered the team club house.

Fred Lindstrom was bitterly disappointed to be passed over in the changing of the guard at the Polo Grounds. Although he had no enmity toward Terry, Lindstrom asked to be traded. Terry obliged by trading Lindstrom to the Pittsburgh Pirates at the end of the season. It was too late to salvage the season for the New York Giants. They finished the 1932 season in sixth place, 18 games behind the leader, but Terry was moving rapidly to turn the team fortunes around. Nevertheless, it was a fine year for Terry, the player. He completed his third consecutive season without missing a game and posted a batting mark of .350 with 28 home runs. Three of his home runs came in one game, August 13, 1932. In his management role, he launched significant improvements in the Giants' minor league system.

Don't miss Part II of "Memphis Bill Terry: Dixie Hutzpah at the Polo Grounds" in the July 2003 issue!

Marching to The Silent Beat of
the Drummer's Drum

by Sir Knight Alvin F. Bohne

Anything and everything occupying space,
Even space itself, is marching, always marching To the silent beat of the Drummer's Drum.

Marching, marching; all are marching;
Always marching, forever marching
To the silent beat of the Drummer's drum.

The Drummer barked an order;
A thund'rous crescendo blast
Scattering dust and gas and stone.

Then came vastness, void of order.
Reigned confusion; scattered matter,
Stars and planets, comets, moons.

Followed then the Drummer's drumroll
Bringing chaos to attention.
Then creation started marching.

The Drummer gazed on His creation;
Said, "It is good." and added man
Giving purpose and a reason to his march.

Now they come, a parade of souls
Marching, marching; all are marching,
To the Drummer's plan of endless time.

Marching all together, each alone,
Each out of step but all in time.
Marching, marching always marching.

And still they come, that endless line;
A known beginning - with a promised end.
Wrought with worry but worry not.

March the hard-felt path of contradiction;
Soothe the soul or pain the conscience.
Some are good and some are evil.

And still they come - that great parade;
Spanning eons blessed with peace
And all the horrors wrought by war.

Gaining knowledge; spawning progress.
Born to love - learned to hate.
Taught to learn, learned to question.

Swollen ranks of differing souls -
True believers and agnostics;
Despots, outlaws, fools and saints.

Timid, bold, careless, caring,
Healthy, sickly marching on.
Conflicts reign but all's in order.

Marching without manual or instruction
Captive in that fateful march -
Inherent by the Drummer's plan.

Some are marching quick-step,
Others marking time and
The others to a cadence in between.

But all are marching, always marching Each one different, yet all alike; marching To the silent beat of the Drummer's drum.

Some marchers halt at sunrise,
Others will halt at dusk,
The others halt in times between.

But halt they must, those destined Marchers; how and when determined By the silent beat of the Drummer's drum.

Other drummers may beat a drum For certain poor fools to follow. Following noise but going nowhere.

Vain their hope. Vain their march;
Marching not to that noisy beat
But still to the silent beat of the Drummer's drum.

Here comes the young - there goes the old! Those souls now old yet once were young... Now the young are growing old.

Still they come, that eternal march. Not by chance or happenstance but To the beat divine of the Drummer's drum.

Marching, marching now with questions
What's the reason, sense or purpose, To this endless beat of the Drummer's drum?

Do the Drummer's angels march in heaven?
Do earth-freed souls march there too? Is this the wage and profit of their being?

If the Drummer's angels march in the heaven, Then the earth-freed souls march there too, All in step and all in time in measured cadence.

Marching, marching, all are marching -
Always marching; forever marching To the silent beat of the Drummer's drum.

Robert L. Dluge, Jr., R. W. Grand Master of Masons in Pennsylvania, has a great love for model train collecting, so it is only fitting that he would have created a Pennsylvania Masonic train. The train, manufactured by Weaver Models of Northumberland, PA, is an "O" gauge, three-rail set consisting of an Atlantic C-1 engine with a tender, five cars, and a caboose. Each piece is marked with Masonic symbols representing a majority of the organizations that comprise the Family of Freemasonry. The engine and cars are available for $375.00 from the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, One North Broad Street, Philadelphia, PA 19107-2520. DeMolay Celebrates Its 84th Birthday!

On March 18, 2003, DeMolay celebrated its 84th birthday as the premier youth organization dedicated to teaching young men to be better persons and leaders. DeMolay has honored "Dad" Land by designating March as DeMolay Month. March is the month when DeMolay chapters across the country unite to raise public awareness of DeMolay through community service projects.

It seems such a short time ago that "Dad" Frank S. Land founded DeMolay. A prominent Mason and Masonic Leader, Land founded DeMolay based on the same principles as Masonry: brotherhood, family, and charity. The year was 1919, and Land was working at the Scottish Rite employment office in Kansas City, Missouri, when he founded Mother Chapter, the original DeMolay chapter.

Since its inception, DeMolay has held fast to timeless values. As always, DeMolay is teaching young men basic life principles and leadership skills - principles and skills the young men of DeMolay will use all their lives. DeMolay continues to provide a positive environment for young men. By teaching love of God, home, and country; DeMolay remains a constant and positive force for the youth of our nation.

By offering a special opportunity for young men to grow, learn, and lead today; DeMolay stands at the forefront of youth development. As a Mason, you can help in many ways. Support a local DeMolay chapter in their DeMolay endeavors, or offer your time and talents as a DeMolay advisor or adult volunteer.

On a larger scale, DeMolay sponsorship is an opportunity to make a difference. Each DeMolay chapter must be sponsored by a group of Freemasons. Masonic sponsorship enables DeMolay chapters to have dependable, dedicated, and devoted adult volunteer "advisors." Preparing the young men of DeMolay to be leaders of character is a rewarding and wonderful experience for many Freemasons.

See if a Masonic organization you are a member of would sponsor a DeMolay chapter or provide financial support to DeMolay. (DeMolay is a 501(c)(3) charitable organization, so contributions are tax deductible.) If you would like to help in any way, please contact DeMolay International at 1-800-DEMOLAY or e-mail: development@demolay.org - You can also visit our web site at www.demolay.org

A Smile That Says "Hello"

Maybe he's a bit old-fashioned, maybe sort of every day,
And his battered hat may cover hair that fast is turning gray;
Yes, perhaps his step may falter as he walks - this man I know -
But there's something in his manner and his smile that says 'Hello.'

Just perhaps, he may have suffered, who is there to say he'd not,
May have been a trifle lonely, may have missed of life a lot;

Yes, he may have had his troubles that from day to day would grow,
But, in spite of that, he always has a smile that says "Hello."

Touch of Midas may have missed him, but in friendship he is rich,
And in hearts of those who know him he has carved himself a niche;
Oh, perhaps he lacks the polish, lacks the glamour others show,
But he warms the hearts of many with a smile that says 'Hello.'
